

COVID-19

Automotive

The business context for the automotive industry changed abruptly with COVID-19. The ensuing supply shocks resulted in issues around labor obligations and supply chain questions that require accurate analysis of contractual terms and litigation risks. Financial arrangements also require focused attention. Publicly traded companies have additional obligations to appropriately inform the markets of actions and revised contexts. The distribution system is shaken and grinding to a halt. It is now critical to know what is being proposed, the appropriate changes to implement, and how to identify and take advantage of the available programs to manage your business on a global scale.

Our deep experience in the industry allows us to leverage our knowledge of the legal context to effectively navigate you through this challenging time. Please do reach out to your usual point of contact at Hogan Lovells regarding COVID-19 questions, alternatively Patrick Ayad or Lance Bultena will be happy to steer you to the right contact person.

Our firm's cross-industry COVID-19 topic center has additional resources and tools available for you. Read more here.
